The Max Planck Society for the Advancement of Science comprises 78 research facilities with some 12,400 staff, including around 4,300 scientists. In addition to this, about 10,900 scholarship holders, guest scientists, and doctoral candidates joined the Max Planck Society in 2005. The annual budget for 2006 is calculated in total at 1,379 million euros.

Research activities of the Max Planck Society focus on basic research in natural sciences and the humanities.

The Max Planck Society is a non-profit organization registered under private law as an incorporated association. Its central decision-making body is the Senate with members from the world of politics, the scientific community, and the professional public, providing for a well-balanced partnership.
